CONNECTING PEDAGOGIES:
ACCELERATING IMPACT WITH
SERVICE LEARNING AND INFORMATION LITERACY

A workshop featuring —

Jennifer Nutefall
University Librarian,
Santa Clara University

Alex Hodges
Associate Director,
Instruction & Research Services,
American University

Librarians can play an important role in supporting service learning initiatives in making informed use of the knowledge resources available to them.

Presenters will outline how the pedagogy that underlies service learning also foregrounds the pedagogy that occurs in library-based research instruction, i.e. information literacy.

Attendees will learn how to connect service learning and information literacy through the use of the Framework for Information Literacy for Higher Education. This framework can serve as an important tool for: designing campus resources that can impact community welfare; creating environments of collaboration across the education continuum; and appraising the impact of community-based assignments.
